

A Prayer For My Child

I pray you find your heart and the love and light of which you are created, for when you follow your heart and cease living to please others, you have found your true self and the key to happiness. I pray only for your happiness.

I pray you find the perfection of the universe and in it the ability to forgive, for in universal love and forgiveness you become one with God, and find God's kingdom.

I pray you come to understand the true nature of humility, not as a position of weakness, but a platform of strength from which to live your life. God does not judge us or place any greater or lesser value on any of us, but only loves us. Why should you do differently?

I pray you experience wholeness and wellness. Anger, sadness, sorrow, and pain are part of the human experience. These emotions are not to be avoided but embraced. Without the experience of sadness and sorrow, you would never understand joy and happiness. Joyfully accept these emotions as gifts when they come into your life and trust that as day follows night, joy always follows pain.

I pray you come to understand the depth of love I have for you. You are the fulfillment of one of my deepest wishes: to be given a soul to love and nurture. I have tried my best to share my love with you, but at times, have fallen short of my mark. My final prayer is that you forgive my errors that you may someday learn to forgive your own with your children.
